Consul General Mason's latest report.
There are now thirty-three cities of the 100,000 class in Germany, and some of them show most astonishing growth for the last five years.

Nuremberg, for example, is one of the oldest towns in Europe, yet it is growing faster than any American city of the 100,000 class did in the last decade. Nuremberg has gained 98,357 people since 1895, or more than 60 per cent. Posen, another ancient town, did nearly as well, with 58.6 per cent gain. Stettin gained nearly 50 per cent, Enabled and Dortmund nearly 30 per cent; Frankfort and Kiel, 25 per cent. Only one of the thirty-three in the 100,000 class showed a decline, and that was very small. Contains and the selection of the major of the policy of the sales and the neighborhood.
